Moderate Pool

Fund Overview

Description

The Moderate Pool aims to seek both capital appreciation and income in a balanced portfolio allocation. Pool assets are invested in a globally diverse portfolio of high quality traditional equities and fixed income instruments along with select alternative investments, including exposure to private equity and private credit.

About Performance

The investment results depicted herein represent historical net performance after the deduction of investment management costs.

Annual, cumulative and annualized total returns are calculated assuming reinvestment of dividends and income plus capital appreciation. Performance for periods greater than one year is annualized. The performance data presented has been prepared by the fund or its sponsor.

Past performance is not a guarantee of future results.

Market Commentary

July was a constructive month for capital markets, with equities demonstrating notable resilience despite intermittent volatility from higher oil prices, inflation concerns, and questions around the profitability of AI-related investment. US stocks finished the month on a stronger footing, supported by solid corporate earnings, continued enthusiasm around cloud computing and AI, and durable risk appetite; while the S&P 500 finished July with a slight monthly decline, the late-month rally helped preserve strong year-to-date gains, leaving the main equity indices up +9.0% each. Overall, July reinforced the positive equity narrative for 2026: earnings momentum remained a key support, leadership broadened beyond a single theme at points, and investors continue to look through short-term macro uncertainty.

Fixed income also offered positives, even as the month's rate backdrop was more challenging. Treasury yields moved higher as investors weighted persistent inflation pressures, higher energy prices, and the Federal Reserve's July 29 decision to hold the federal funds target range at 3.5%-3.75%, with three officials dissenting in favor of a hike. That yield backup weighed on core bond prices and left broad aggregate fixed income modestly negative year to date, but continues to provide income opportunities in high-quality bonds.
